Dear

I guess if it were that simple, it would have been resolved many years ago.

I hope you'll excuse my intrusion.

As you know the conflict between Shell and the Donovans goes back many years. I would prefer not to go into the details of why an arrangement of the sort you suggest would not work in practice with these individuals.

Dear

I can't see how it could be construed as blackmail. The Donovan's have already published information about Shell and will continue to do so. I am suggesting a legal agreement between the protraganists which would result in The Donovans transferring ownership of all their websites to Shell and agreeing not to publish anything in the future in return for a sum of money.

I own a successful business and the last thing I would want is a determined, disgruntled customer/supplier, hell bent on making my life difficult.

You must think I'm a complete weirdo or have some connection to the Donovan's. Truth is I went to a wine tasting in Bury St Edmunds and really liked the building it was in, when I got home I googled the address. It turned out to be the former offices of Don Marketing.....

Having spent 8 hours of my life reading all about the battles between the two of you I felt I might as well write to you and tell you what I would do.

Thank you for your thoughts. I think that inadvertently you are suggesting we respond to blackmail. Apart from the ethical considerations, what we do the next time it happened?

Dear

I have no connections to Shell or the Donovan's. An insomnia induced, web browsing session led me to the dispute between the two of you. I have no comment regarding the events, other than to say I can see that it has taken up a lot of resources between the two protagonists. If I were in Shell's position I would offer the Donovan's £250,000 to leave the world of Shell behind them and to get on with their lives.

Their website www.royaldutchshellplc.com ranks 6th on Google!

That is all.
