

Former Shell Geologist, Dr John Huong

Former Shell Chairman, Sir Philip Watts

A TALE OF TWO SHELL EMPLOYEES

Malaysian geologist, Dr John Huong, a dedicated Shell employee for 29 years, has been sacked, humiliated and persecuted by Shell management after blowing the whistle internally on the reserves *fraud and other important issues of conscience. Being a man of integrity, Dr Huong insisted on acting at all times within Shell's ethical code (the SGBP). As a result, Dr Huong is now unemployed and unscrupulous lawyers acting for Shell are terrorising him and his family. Compare this with Shell's treatment of Sir Philip Watts, who brought about the demise of Shell Transport and Trading Company and has been publicly branded as a crook. He received a severance/pension package worth over $18 million USD arising from his starring role in the reserves fraud and is indemnified at Shell shareholder cost for any legal cost ramifications arising from his blatant disregard of Shell's ethical code.

*Officially categorized as a fraud by the U.S. Securities & Exchange Commission: Shell's STATEMENT OF GENERAL BUSINESS PRINCIPLES: Publicly branded as a "crook" at the 2004 AGM of the Shell Transport And Trading Company Plc (as reported in a Daily Mirror newspaper article published on 29 June 2004 under the headline: "Investors in a fury over Shell fiasco").
